

Surviving the Catastrophe: An Excerpt of Pain from the Iranian Revolution

The year was 1978. I was a young woman living in Tehran, Iran. The country was in the midst of a revolution, and the streets were filled with chaos and violence. I had never seen anything like it.

One day, I was walking home from school when I saw a group of people gathered around a burning car. I stopped to watch, and I soon realized that the people inside the car were being burned alive. I was horrified. I had never seen such cruelty.

I turned and ran. I ran as fast as I could, but I couldn't get the image of those burning people out of my mind. I ran until I reached the safety of my home. I collapsed on the floor and sobbed.

The next day, I went back to the scene of the crime. The car was still burning, and the smell of burnt flesh filled the air. I stood there for a long time, just staring at the wreckage. I couldn't believe that such a thing had happened in my own country.

I eventually got up and walked away. But I never forgot what I had seen. That day changed my life forever.

The Iranian Revolution was a dark time in our history. But it was also a time of great courage and resilience. The Iranian people stood up to a brutal dictatorship and fought for their freedom. They may not have won, but their struggle will never be forgotten.

I am grateful that I survived the Iranian Revolution. But I will never forget the pain and suffering that I witnessed. I will never forget the people who died. And I will never stop fighting for a better future for Iran.

"An Excerpt of Pain" is a powerful and moving account of the Iranian Revolution. It is a story of survival, resilience, and hope. I highly recommend this book to anyone who wants to learn more about this important chapter in history.
