What are the Duties of a Trustee?

The duties of a trustee are outlined in the trust document. However, there are some general duties that all trustees must follow, including:

- Duty of Loyalty: The trustee must act in the best interests of the beneficiaries of the trust.
- Duty of Care: The trustee must exercise the same degree of care and diligence in managing the trust assets as a prudent person would in managing their own affairs.
- Duty of Impartiality: The trustee must treat all beneficiaries of the trust fairly and impartially.
- Duty of Disclosure: The trustee must provide the beneficiaries of the trust with regular information about the trust assets and how they are being managed.

What are the Liabilities of a Trustee?

Trustees can be held personally liable for any breaches of their duties. This means that if a trustee fails to carry out their duties properly, they may be sued by the beneficiaries of the trust. In some cases, trustees may also be held criminally liable for their actions.
