Konstam was born in London in 1895, and he joined the British Army in 1914. He served in the trenches during World War I, and he was wounded several times. After the war, he returned to civilian life but rejoined the army in 1939 when World War II broke out.

He served in North Africa and Italy during World War II, and he was again wounded several times. After the war, he retired from the army and lived a quiet life until his death in 1979.

The Man Behind the Uniform
